IN THE NEWS

Mansfield Market Assessment

Lots of breaking news over the weekend regarding the War with Iran. Crude is currently trading $95 dollars after hitting $102.50 early this morning. And natural gas production is hovering around 110 bcf/day. It looks like the Strait of Hormuz is trying to reopen or at the least start to move marine traffic thru at a smaller rate. Natural gas is off a touch this morning, as we are trading off with sympathy with crude and global LNG pricing. In our opinion, this is not a market to take a long-term view on a position. ...

Nat-Gas Caught Between Bearish Supply and War

U.S. natural gas prices are edging lower on Sunday. My work suggests traders are more focused on bearish domestic issues rather than the potentially bullish conditions due to the closure of the Strait of Hormuz. At 02:34 GMT, April Natural Gas futures are trading $3.121, down $0.010 or -0.32%. One of the biggest factors weighing on U.S. natural gas prices is warmer weather forecasts. At this time, Spring warmth is eroding late season demand. ... For More info go to <https://tinyurl.com/knsyjk5b>

Asia's LNG Lifeline Takes a Hit

Asia is the biggest market for liquefied natural gas. Asia is also the destination of up to 90% of Qatari and Emirati LNG—or was, until this month. With the shutdown of Qatar's Ras Laffan LNG complex and the Strait of Hormuz traffic disruption, Asia is facing a lot of energy supply pain. QatarEnergy announced a complete halt to LNG production after Iranian drone strikes hit facilities at Ras Laffan Industrial City and Mesaieed Industrial City on March 2. A force majeure declaration followed on QatarEnergy exports.... For more info go to <https://tinyurl.com/5y9myf99>
