EIA Storage, El Niño Forecast Put Bears in Full Control

August natural gas futures are slightly lower early Friday after plunging more than 6% the previous session. It was a bloodbath on Thursday after the bearish EIA storage report, but the sell-off was smooth. Bearish traders first sliced through the 50-day moving average support before systematically taking out three swing bottoms at $3.151, $3.059 and $3.001. Needless to say, the downtrend was reaffirmed according to the swing chart. ... <https://tinyurl.com/2x5644c2>

US Natural Gas Prices Drop to Six Week Low

U.S. natural gas futures fell about 4% to a six-week low on Thursday on expectations gas flows to liquefied natural gas (LNG) export plants will remain low through late August due to planned maintenance at Freeport LNG's plant in Texas, and after the release of a federal report showing last week's storage build was much bigger than expected.... Oil, Gas Recovery May Take Two Years After War

It could take up to two years to recover a significant share of oil and gas production that has disrupted by the Iran war, Fatih Birol, executive director of the International Energy Agency, said. The recovery will be gradual as damage from the conflict has affected oil fields, refineries and pipelines across the Persian Gulf, Birol said on Bloomberg Television's Wall Street Week....
